Changing Landscapes, Transforming Lives.

The people of AIIAS change the world across various landscapes—whether they are physical, virtual, spiritual, or academic. This issue of Flags showcases just how some of these landscapes have changed.

Perhaps the most obvious is the academic landscape with the annual theological forum and international conference on business, education, and public health. In addition, new academic programs are developed and accredited, which helps students to grow intellectually.

Students are encouraged to change their personal spiritual landscape by growing and developing in their personal relationship with God. This happens in many ways, most notably through week of prayer programs and other forms of regular gatherings for worship. A first this year is AIIAS held the first-ever virtual week of prayer, thanks to AIIAS Online. It created an opportunity for students from around the world to grow in their faith journey.

Ultimately, the sense of the divine mission to proclaim the gospel to the world relates to this spiritual landscape. One outreach program—the jail ministry program—takes students and employees to nearby prisons to hold worship services and offer Bible studies with inmates each week. This issue highlights the story of lives impacted through this ministry. Other outreach opportunities include mission trips, most notably the mission trip to India and the rebuilding of the Buenavista church in Palawan.

For friends and alumni who come back for a visit to the campus will quickly notice that the physical landscape of AIIAS is rapidly changing. New buildings such as Tower P and the Pavilion are highlighted in this issue, along with the Seminary extension under construction and the soon-to-begin scholarship tower.

Life is a journey as we each have the opportunity to change our own landscape, and most importantly to share God’s love and thereby transform those around us for God’s honor and glory.

The director of the Ellen G. White Estate, James R. Nix, along with associate director, Alberto R. Timm, celebrated with the faculty, students, administration, and friends of AIIAS the dedication of the newly minted Ellen G. White Estate Branch Office. This particular branch is one of five selected Branch Offices around the world, in addition to the main office at the General Conference headquarters. Up until now, it has been one of a series of White Estate research centers that are set up across the world divisions of the church.

"The importance of having a Branch Office here on the AIIAS campus," explained AIIAS president Stephen R. Guptill, "is because this is the place where pastors and teachers are trained." Students come from every division of the world church, including some who obtain doctoral degrees and return to teach at their respective educational institutions.

Nix observed during the dedication, held June 28, 2014, that "being able to elevate this [research center] to a full Branch Office has been a dream of mine for several years." The White Estate board voted a request to upgrade the center along with a parallel Branch Office at the Adventist University of Africa located in Kenya. Together, these two Branch Offices are the first to be opened outside of North America.

Branch Office director, Dr. Reuel Almocera, noted that the upgrading to a Branch Office marks a "significant milestone for AIIAS." In addition to increased resources, it will allow Dr. Almocera to have a significantly increased travel budget provided by the General Conference that will allow him to do more training across Asia. In addition, it will provide archival housing, including a climate-controlled vault, which allows rare early Adventist materials to be preserved. Dr. Almocera has a passion for telling the story of early Adventism, including rare materials that document the spread of the Adventist message across Asia and around the world.

"A Branch Office like this is for everybody—old people, adults, young people, children," remarked Alberto R. Timm. "This is not restricted for Adventists but also for those who want to know more about Ellen White, like theologians from other church organizations who intend to do further research."

"Come, study, read, absorb, and believe," noted Elder Nix during his remarks during the opening ceremony. "Come and enjoy the fruits from Ellen G. White’s ministry as she points to the Bible and helps us on our way to heaven."
The AIIAS Public Health Department held the annual Health Festival Weekend on Nov. 28-30, 2014. Students took ownership of the project as an outgrowth of their class requirements. The class was tasked with planning, marketing, and implementing the event. The various student talents along with a commitment helped them meet their aim. The purpose of the festival is to offer a comprehensive healthy lifestyle that can impact community members. The weekend highlighted various health foci including the mental, physical, emotional, and spiritual.

The health screening started on Friday morning and was available to all community members. Students took their blood pressure, height, weight, and other vital information that were written down. Physicians were available to consult for free about their health concerns. A corner was set up for free massages.

A cooking demonstration focused on how to prepare healthy, nutrient-filled meals that are also appealing. A vegan chef shared practical tips for every member of the family. She suggested alternative ingredients that are much healthier. The kids especially loved to taste samples.

On Sabbath, the various cultural communities presented healthy dishes from their respective cultures and countries. The community was able to taste the world without leaving campus. With all the beautiful displays and mouth-watering tastes, participants could discover eating healthfully does not mean that the food is boring or bland.

Participants expressed appreciation for this event. Some commented about how thankful they are for their new outlook on health. Instead of a focus on just eating the right food and exercising, it was instead a much more holistic picture. “I would like to change my lifestyle. I have learned many things during this program and I know how to make the necessary changes,” commented one participant.

The health festival is an essential part of life at AIIAS. It helps demonstrate how students and faculty can work together to invite people to live healthier and happier lives. Professors teach theories, examinations measure how well a student understands concepts, and programs like the health festival weekend give a student practical experience to expand what has been taught in the classroom.

ATESEA1 is an association that provides accreditation of the degree programs of no less than 90 schools including AIIAS. Until this year, the Association had only been accrediting the MDiv program of the Seminary. However, during its general assembly in March 2013, the association broadened its accreditation services, thus, making it possible for the inclusion of all AIIAS Seminary programs – MMin, MA Min, MA-R, MTh, DMin, and PhD.

An international team from ATESEA visited the AIIAS campus on July 2 to 4, 2014, inspecting documents, activities, and facilities as well as meeting separately with students, staff, faculty, administrators, and even board members. The team was led by Dr. Anthony Loke from Seminary Teologi in Malaysia and included Dr. Lester Ruiz from the Association of Theological Schools (ATS) based in the USA and Canada. He is the director of the Commission on Accrediting and Secretary of the Board of Commissioners and came to Asia especially for the AIIAS evaluation.

The quality of a degree is often judged by its accreditation status. AIIAS has long enjoyed the highest levels of institutional accreditation by the Adventist Accrediting Association (AAA) and once more received the highest level of accreditation in 2013—a 5-year accreditation for the 4th consecutive time. With this current achievement from ATESEA, the AIIAS Seminary now has specialized accreditation for all its programs. We give God the glory for this accomplishment.

The success is ascribed to divine guidance as well as the hard work and collaboration of Dr. Ben Mergal and his team who prepared the documents for the visit. We are pleased that all the AIIAS Seminary degree programs are fully accredited by both the AAA and ATESEA.
DISCOVERING NEW HOPE IN PRISON

She experienced new changes in her life as she made a decision to explore her faith once again. At the same time, she also started a family. Her boyfriend, Kenneth*, helped her to reduce her workaholism. They soon decided to get married. Local authorities interrupted their wedding reception. The couple were arrested on false accusations. Angelica was deeply hurt. “I couldn’t understand why God would allow this bad thing to happen to us when we were trying so hard to live a good life and build our relationship with Him,” she explained.

While in jail, family members brought them food and a Bible. She struggled with disappointment and bitter feelings until she realized that such negative emotions would not help her. Now she has time to pray, study the Bible, and pursue a relationship with God. She discovered comfort in God’s promises of protection and guidance.

Two days after her arrest, they were both released on bail. They decided to take even more seriously their commitment to rebuild their lives. They found a church where they could obtain spiritual nurture. Angelica returned to work, but made a conscious effort to not let her work consume her spiritual life. Unfortunately, they fell back into their old lifestyle. Once again their spiritual lives suffered.

Later that year Angelica and Kenneth were arrested again, this time in their home. They had an outstanding warrant. Now they left behind four children without anyone to care for them. They believed that the arrest warrant was not active so they hoped that their time in jail would this time be much shorter.

Now Angelica was even more hurt and disappointed. “Why God would allow this to happen to me?” Now she had no one to visit and provide support. She worried about what would happen to their children. Even their relatives did not come to visit. It was an incredibly painful situation. At night, Angelica questioned God with tears. She felt like despondency would overwhelm her.

At this tender moment, Angelica felt God’s grace. She remembered her first stint in prison. Now she remembered a verse from Matthew 28: “Come to me, all of you who are weary and carry heavy burdens, and I will give you rest.” She realized that this was once again a new opportunity to build a relationship with God. She found the story of Job particularly comforting as she compared her plight to that of Job. She felt that just like Job she had lost everything.

Other prison inmates ridiculed her for her faith. She continued to pray and study her Bible. She also began to share her faith. As a trained massage therapist, she tried to help others in pain. A few weeks later the other inmates looked to her as if she were a nurse to take care of any of their maladies. Within a few weeks, any time a fellow inmate wanted help or prayer, they would turn to Angelica. Soon she viewed her time in jail as spending time in the mission field.

While in jail, she discovered a group of students and faculty from AIIAS who held worship services. The singing and Bible studies encouraged Angelica to grow closer to God. “The more she attended, the more she sensed God’s spiritual direction in her life. During one such worship service, she asked the pastors to pray for her faith to be strengthened. She discovered new hope for her life. ‘I realized that as a Christian I had the responsibility to share God and salvation with other people.’”

Six months later, her husband was released from jail. He disappeared and the other inmates tormented Angelica once again. She was abandoned. Angelica didn’t know what to think. She did not understand why he was released early when they had both been accused of the same crime. When he did not return to visit, she became worried. She poured out her heart to God and asked for him to intervene in her situation.

Three months later Angelica was released from jail, too. Relieved, she was also sad because her mission to the other inmates came to an end. She was now worried that she would return to her previous lifestyle. She asked her Adventist friends to help her find a local church family. The pastors made arrangements for her to attend the AIIAS Seventh-day Adventist Church. She found a new spiritual family who treated her as a fellow daughter whom she started living with. Angelica formally joined the church through baptism. A few months later she reconnected with her husband. She shared her faith with him as well. Now back together, they are learning about a new plan for their lives. Through the spiritual guidance of her new “parents” and the support of the community, they are solidifying their faith and integrating it into their lives. All their pain turned into praise. ‘God is really good. He brought me out of a dark place and a busy life. God always has better plans than we have for ourselves.’

ne of the challenges AIIAS Online faces is how to create opportunities to strengthen the spiritual journey of their students. In a virtual world, it may be difficult for online students to consult or talk about their struggles. As a consequence, a program was designed to reach out to a broad spectrum of students, regardless of their particular religious background, that was held from March 9-14, 2015, with the theme “Abraham: The Faith Journey.” This event brought students together around the world to engage in interactive worship activities. Such activities included spending time in personal reflection through online messages, praying together, and sharing testimonies about God’s goodness in their own spiritual experience. Over 75 participants spanning across 32 countries participated together.

HOW IT BEGAN
AIIAS regularly hosts at least two week-of-prayer events each school year, but online students felt left out. In order to share this experience Dr. Leni Casimiro, director of AIIAS Online, cast a vision for this idea for her students. A support committee helped her to expand the idea into a concrete plan. “There is a fine balancing point between a student watching presentations online and a student participating in a virtual week of prayer,” reflected Dr. Casimiro. Together they wanted to create an interactive program that nourished the spiritual lives of students.

DAILY PROGRAM
Each day had a combination of parts that created an interactive worship experience. The video message focused on an aspect of faith was facilitated online each day. A variety of students and faculty had pre-recorded messages in the AIIAS media center. Afterward, participants engaged in an interactive form of worship as students reflected upon the message and sought to engage with other students in an online forum. Participants shared questions and reflections.

A popular part of the week of prayer was the prayer garden. Students were asked to submit prayer requests prior to the daily session. Well-known spiritual leaders from around the world were asked to record prayers for the students. As additional requests came in, the session became interactive as increasing prayer requests showed that this was resonating with a real need felt by the online students.

Another popular area was a “counseling nook,” which provided a free counseling service. Students unburdened themselves and sought encouragement from trained spiritual counselors in a confidential environment. Participants could e-mail, chat, phone, or even obtain counsel via a video link at specified times during each day.

Finally, an open board was provided for students to share their testimonies. Students expressed passionate feelings about how God had led in their own lives.

SUMMING IT UP
Students affirmed that the virtual week-of-prayer was a positive experience. This pioneering program brought spiritual blessings to the students. Some asked for new opportunities to pray together as a regular part of the curriculum. “I’ve been tremendously blessed by this week of prayer,” observed Randy Manuel, one such student. “It is truly a refreshing spiritual journey with the Lord.”

This week of prayer created a virtual spiritual community. By listening to the speakers each morning they were able to connect faces with names. “The spiritual experience for our students exceeded our expectations,” stated AIIAS Online director Dr. Leni Casimiro. “Not only did they participate in the week of prayer but they took ownership of it. Despite their busy schedules, they wanted more.”

This virtual week-of-prayer was a first, and even if it was an experiment, AIIAS hopes to cultivate this as a regular event that fosters spiritual growth. Such a virtual community helps students to connect with one another as they deepen their faith in a new and refreshing way.

NEW DORMITORY WILL PROVIDE ADDITIONAL HOUSING AND SCHOLARSHIP FUNDS

CARLOS BIAGGI

Perhaps the most difficult experience for a student is having to wait for an interview with the AIIAS scholarship committee. For some, this may be their last opportunity to continue their studies. Those who request funds come for a variety of reasons. For some, the need may have been precipitated by a health crisis. At other times, a sponsor was unable to continue their funding. At other times, the student may be required to take more classes than they had planned. Whatever the reason, they are unable to find the resources to help them continue their studies. AIIAS urgently needs more student aid that is available on a long-term, sustainable basis.

After one scholarship committee meeting, I met a student at a water fountain. I greeted him and asked him how he is doing. “This is not a good day for me,” he replied. He shared that he lives off campus due to the unavailability of campus housing. He had his laptop stolen a few months earlier, and once again earlier that day his laptop was stolen again. He pleaded with me to provide more campus housing that would be much safer for him to live in. Such a request reflects an urgent need among AIIAS students, which is why a new dormitory was recently completed, Tower P, this past January. However, the units are already full and additional housing is needed to supply the demand. In addition, new cohort groups for intensive programs mean that on a regular basis groups with 35 or more students arrive on campus for a few weeks each week.

In light of these needs, AIIAS administration tried to find a way to balance the needs of students for scholarship funds combined with the urgent need for housing. As a consequence, a plan was made for a new “scholarship tower.” The idea is for donors to contribute to build a new student-housing tower with all proceeds used for student scholarships.

After spending months fundraising, enough money has been donated to begin the construction of this new “scholarship tower.” Construction is scheduled to begin this coming August. We invite you to support this long-term scholarship and housing project, or to consider contributing to the worthy-student scholarship fund. In order to support this initiative, please e-mail advancement@aiias.edu or find more information at www.aiias.edu/givetoaiaas.

One of the ways that AIIAS students and faculty are making a difference was through the building and dedication of a new Seventh-day Adventist Church in Buenavista Village, Palawan Province, Philippines. This new church facility was an initiative of the AIIAS Business Club. Students and faculty traveled to Buenavista to give Bible studies and hold meetings. They demolished the old “nipa” (straw) structure and laid the foundation for a church building. It took 20 months to raise funds to build the new church facility.

The project began in October 2012, after AIIAS students and faculty traveled to Buenavista for a mission trip. Led by Mr. Raimond Luntungan, club sponsor, seven members of the AIIAS Business Club participated in the dedication service, with another approximately 120 representatives from the local church and surrounding community. Local district pastor, Rudy Fajutagana, along with local church elder Roger Giganto, foreman of the construction, shared the story of their church. Carlos Biaggi, project coordinator, shared their story from the perspective of AIIAS participants and donors. Pastor Daniel Malabad, president of Palawan Adventist Mission, offered the dedicatory sermon, litany, and prayer of dedication.

A particularly poignant moment occurred when Pastors Malabad and Fajutagana gave a plaque of appreciation to Msafiri Senguo, AIIAS Business Club president, along with fellow representatives to thank the 138 donors (127 from the Philippines) who sacrificed to make this church structure possible.

After the dedicatory service, four people expressed their commitment to Jesus Christ through baptism in the waters of the China Sea—in addition to the previous 12 souls who were baptized from the initial mission trip. This new church facility is a testimony to the Lord as hundreds of tourists travel nearby to see the Underground River, described as one of the “New” Seven Wonders of the World.

Of course the AIIAS Business Club recognized that it took many people to make this project possible, and each person through their contributions and prayers helped to make a difference. Sharing the message of the gospel is a vital part of what it means to be a part of AIIAS as students for opportunities to serve the Lord until Jesus Christ comes again.

NOTE: The total amount fundraised and invested in the church building was USD $36,762.45.

A 16-member team spearheaded a series of evangelistic meetings in South Garo Hills, Meghalaya, India. They focused on the meetings, personal visitation, health education, and music ministry. Participants deepened their cultural experience with tours of various historical and religious landmarks.

MAY 2014

RUSSIA STUDY TOUR

A group of 32 students and faculty went on a study tour to Russia. Features included cultural sites in Moscow and St. Petersburg, with spiritual reflections on the meaning of the art from the framework of a Christian perspective. Participants also visited Zaoksky Adventist University.
Each semester, a week of prayer program is held to enrich students’ spiritual lives and reinvigorate their personal relationship with God. In August 2014, Joshua Shin, President of 1000 Missionary Movement, shared about “Followership.” In February 2015, students and faculty shared about various giants in a week of prayer program themed “Facing the Giants.”

The three-day 17th AIIAS Annual Theological Forum was themed “Asian Faces of Adventist Mission.” It allowed for a multi-cultural dialogue about the opportunities and challenges that the Seventh-day Adventist Church faces across Asia. The various perspectives of what characterizes Adventist mission in an Asian setting were discussed and acknowledged. Each year, the forum brings scholars as well as church workers from national and international destinations to discuss relevant topics.

With such an array of cultures, AIIAS Student Association organizes an annual cultural night. This year’s theme was “Hospitality Beyond Borders.” The student body represents over 80 countries. Different communities demonstrated their culture through song, dance, and/or short plays. The audience experienced a taste of each culture. The program was streamed live on the web for alumni and friends to share in the experience. This year’s cultural night was an adventure!
AIIAS celebrated its 99th graduation ceremony with 95 graduates from 35 countries across 12 divisions of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. The class of 2015 gave the institution a new logo at the campus’ main entrance. Guest speakers included Elie Henry, executive secretary of Inter-American Division; Alberto Gulan Jr., president of Southern Asia-Pacific Division; and Doug Batchelor, president of Amazing Facts Ministries.

The mini olympics is one of the most anticipated events of the school year that features badminton, soccer, basketball, and volleyball. The entire campus is divided equally into four teams. Over three days a fun time is had by all, especially the “blue team” that won this year.

The first Saturday of each month features different talented musicians. From a capella to instrumental, musicians have an opportunity to share their talents. The concerts are an opportunity to foster spirituality through reflection and prayer.

The theme for the 11th AIIAS African Theological Association (AATA) Theological Forum was “The Sabbath in the African Experience.” Scholars presented on the Sabbath—what it means, how people perceive it, what challenges are associated with it, and what perspectives people have about it. This association was started by students from Africa who saw the need to discuss relevant issues from an African perspective.
AIIAS Board member, Lisa M. Beardsley-Hardy, cast a vision to AIIAS administration during a board meeting about the possibility of creating “third space” or an environment beside the classroom and home for students, staff, and faculty to interact together. As a result a new pavilion was built in the middle of towers A through L that creates an area for sharing meals, studying, or simply, socializing. A nearby playground provides a fun place for children to play while parents can observe nearby in the shade. Students and staff who live off campus now have a convenient place to eat a meal. The pavilion was officially opened on May 7, 2015, as AIIAS board, administration, faculty, staff, and students gathered to celebrate the occasion.
"BIG 4" PROGRAM PREPARES STUDENTS FOR SERVICE

Along-term dream of AIIAS faculty is to create an opportunity to train more pastors in the field. In order to do this, a special proposal was given to request an appropriation for $700,000 with the goal of educating 60 pastors through the Master of Arts in Ministry (MMin) program. Each of the unions in the Southern Asia-Pacific Division (SSD) and the Northern Asia-Pacific Division (NSD) were asked to recommend a group of students.

The first class began with exactly 60 students on September 20, 2010. Students participated in three classes each year in 2010, 2012, and 2014. In 2011 students who specialized in Buddhist studies were sent to Bangkok, students focused on mission in China were sent to Hong Kong, and Muslim-focused students were sent to Jakarta in order to receive specialized training for each context. Each student was required to develop contextualized materials for their particular ministry situation either as an individual or as a group. In 2013, AIIAS professors visited each of the students in the field to ascertain the challenges and help guide in the selection and development of an appropriate project. On March 6, 2014, The Big 4 students held a ministry fair, which displayed all of the projects, for the AIIAS community. Details about the projects are kept in the seminary and AIIAS library.

On March 9, 2014, 44 students graduated from the MA program: 10 with the Buddhist emphasis, 13 with the Chinese emphasis, and 21 with the Muslim emphasis. Three additional students graduated with a Graduate Certificate and seven more are nearing completion, which means that 54 students will successfully complete the program.

Remaining funds are being strategically used to help further Adventist mission training. In 2014, the Metro Manila outreach was strongly supported by providing training modules. This year, the focus is on understanding and ministering at Buddhist funerals in Thailand. The Big 4 program and the SSD have developed a cost-sharing plan to enhance the effectiveness of the funds. Future programs are envisioned for Myanmar and the Chinese work in Asia. The work for Muslims will be supported in the future through teaching Muslim ministry to pastors in the East Indonesian Union Conference as well as through a practicum for students and lay leaders in Bangladesh.

The Big 4 program recognizes that in order to be effective and to facilitate the maximum impact in order to share the Adventist message across the 10/40 window, wisdom, patience, and energy over a long period of time is required.

James Park is the Director of the Big 4 Program, Professor of Discipleship and Mission.
